

DISASTER RECOVERY AND BUSINESS CONTINUITY CASE STUDY

Disasters rarely happen but as a business that helps people recover from IT disasters, we see the chaos and stress that situations like a critical business impact can cause.

We are obsessed with business continuity and disaster recovery. We have seen on too many occasions that most businesses fail to take this seriously enough until the disaster happens.

80% of businesses affected by a major incident either never re-open or close within 18 months (Source, AXA) and 57% of SMBs have no Disaster Recovery (DR) plan in place (Source, Symantec).

If your business doesn't have a solid disaster recovery plan in place to ensure your business can continue to work, or you don't have the confidence to know how that plan is going to be implemented or what your recovery objectives are and need to be, then we suggest that you need a bit of help to put all of this in place to rationalise your business continuity strategy.

Gibbors Accountants, a full service Accountancy Firm knows how important it is that their business is recoverable in any disaster or crisis event, whether from a simple file or email deletion to a full company-wide accounts system restoration to meet their client and regulatory demands.

“ It's absolutely essential to know that our company can recover from an IT disaster. We simply do not have time to wait for our systems to become available especially during tax and quarterly target periods. Amazing Support have put in place various in-house, hosted backup and disaster recovery solutions so that if our business is impacted, we are back online and working within our time objectives. Our clients expect that from us and Amazing Support have delivered it. ”
